

Five Questions

29 March 2016

A reader leaps forward with a handful more. The Committee responds....

Q1. Do ET's access knowledge (science) as a collective resource as they need it or do they learn it like ourselves.

C: Both, just as you do and have on Earth. As humans share information among nations, so do your extraterrestrial cousins among many civilizations.

Q2. Are the Et's on the ship more like our military personnel? Is there a commander?

C: There is a well defined organization which resembles a human military unit, yes. Yes, there is a commander. These visitors are not military minded, they are explorers, emissaries and ambassadors. Earth is not the sole or even high priority mission, in many cases. The defense capabilities are for protection of both humans and the visitors. Their abilities are used to disable and prevent human use of force, thus removing the need for protection beyond prevention and avoidance of harm to all sides. Close study of the visitors' teams would lead humans to understand them as anthropologist explorers and diplomats.

Q3. Are the elder ETs the ones that are responsible for the decisions to go to a certain planet? Are they elected or is it based on their longevity and experience?

C: Yes, there are chosen leaders and representatives and often alliance involvement in the planning of Earth visits and observations. There are many considerations given to the selection of leaders of such civilizations and Earth visits are rarely given much value in leadership selection. Chosen leadership will designate an envoy to the galactic alliances, one with authority to commit to study, including visits, to and of civilizations not aligned with a galactic conference. Such as Earth.

Q4. Does the committee know the individuals who are actively reading and participating on this site.

C: Yes, we know of all of you.

Q5. Whenever I read the words of the committee I feel this emotional pull. Familiar but just out of my reach. Just a comment.

C: You are not out of reach, your human training creates this. The emotional pull you feel is your true self poking through the wrapping. The human word is channeling, you are feeling the beginnings of telepathic communication natural to you.

Thank you Patrick for making this information available to us.

Says Patrick (and NOT The Committee) "You're welcome. I am glad you enjoy it."

I can offer some info in regards to Q4 One night in later part of last year, I was having an evening stroll around the block, and I was thinking about something I had just read on the site, and I thought to myself, I wonder if the committee realise they sometimes sound like Yoda, I entertained this thought (and chuckled to myself) for a few moments. The very next day, the committee made a joke'ish reference to themselves sounding like Yoda , Amazing.. And little ol me had that thought on the other side of the planet in a suburban Street in Far North Queensland, Australia.

Yang 31/3/2016 01:00:49

I have also made the association that TC "sound" very much like Master Yoda which is kind of fun. But when you say, the next day, do you mean for you or something you read on the Amendment website?

Steve Williams 31/3/2016 03:45:05

Hi Yang,

Yes, it was the next day that I read something on the Amendment site□

Today, I looked at a photo of a five-month old baby in Yemen who was skeletal. He had died of starvation because he was born in a war with explosions all around.

His mother was so malnourished, that her milk gave out. War has taken down the supply networks for food and medicine in a country that was already poor.

I have to wonder about any ET looking at stuff like this. There is plenty of it on Earth. If such horrors don't exist, or no longer exist on their planets, do they need to take a mountain of tranquilizers just to look upon the violence here?

I live here and I can never get used to it. How must they feel?

Patrick 31/3/2016 09:55:50

Says The Committee, "These behaviors, and the reactions to them, such as this one, supply a human opportunity to solve a human created problem."

Lorri 31/3/2016 10:14:52

Thanks Patrick. Yes I realize it's our problem to solve, but I wonder how an ET feels while observing such horrors. Do they feel frustrated? Sad? Disgusted?

Patrick 31/3/2016 10:53:23

Says The Committee, "ETs that visit Earth do not have the same emotional reaction as humans, because they're not participants. They do not have negative reactions; they have hope mankind can see a way to improve, in the way mankind defines improvement."

As I understand, in fact a soul's life plan may involve "suffering" as we understand from human point of view. So far as a soul is considered, there is no positive or negative...its an experience which will ultimately uplift the soul and hence beneficial for the soul. For other souls, such news and picture may prompt them to do something to cause a change, again uplifting the soul(s). So whatever happens, it ultimately benefits the soul through experience. This awareness, I guess is more commonplace among ETs than in humans. So they do not get overtly emotional.

Patrick 31/3/2016 13:25:54

Well said!

Lorri 31/3/2016 14:40:39

Yeah, I have heard this before. To be honest, I don't find their awareness of the bigger picture all that comforting. The idea that greater awareness results in neutralized emotions feels . . . inhuman on some level. But that's just me. :)

Santanu Acharya 1/4/2016 00:10:24

I agree that its difficult for us to comprehend the lack of emotions as we are emotional beings. But even on Earth, the level of emotions vary. One example (myself being from India) is that when a near and dear one dies, people here cry their hearts out. I have seen the same thing in respect of people from other Asian countries like China. But in Europe and USA, people hardly cry publicly. Its called "dignified" behaviour". For us, Easterners, it appears that Western people lack emotion and are cold.

But that's social behaviour and conditioning and probably an outwardly difference.

Those people on Earth, who are more enlightened and understand (not merely know but comprehend) about the timelessness and deathlessness of soul, they find no reason to cry or be emotional. They get joyful with Love and pained by lack of Love but they also understand that suffering is a part of the challenge of our earth existence that we, the souls, have ourselves embraced willingly for a greater goal. But control over emotions is not the same thing as being detached. We must work towards making a world full of love without getting emotionally disturbed.

Strangely, although people in India and the east in general are perceived as more emotional than those in the west, the Hindu holy books have always advocated the concept of "emotional intelligence" ..doing duty while remaining unperturbed by external influences...

"The contact between the senses and the sense objects give rise to fleeting perceptions of happiness and distress. These are non-permanent, and come and go like the winter and summer seasons. One must learn to tolerate them without being disturbed.

That person who is not affected by happiness and distress, and remains steady in both, becomes liberated.

Be steadfast in the performance of your duty, abandoning attachment to success and failure."
... Bhagavad Gita 2.14-15

I guess, our ET brothers, more enlightened as they are on the reality of the Universe, are less emotional regarding the happenings in the physical world for good reason.

Patrick 1/4/2016 11:04:17

How inhuman is it to observe a wild horse die from thirst and hunger? To watch a pack of hungry coyotes slaughter a young deer Somebody's pet dog? Our emotional attachment, horror, disgust and revulsion attach to our emotional understanding and involvement.

Pack predators rarely kill in the presence of cameras, fearing the nearby humans they can smell from far away. They're alive and well, which means they indeed hunt and eat what they kill.

It's as horrible a death for a wildebeest to be killed by lions as for a human to be murdered in a knife attack, yet human reaction and understanding to each event, are very different.

The ET reaction is to attempt understanding why humans initiate armed conflict and allow others to perish because of it, with knowledge of both consequences and alternate behaviors. In other words, to understand why humans value war's outcome more than its costs.

To expect or even wonder what ET observer emotions might be, and to be disappointed the sadness is not shared, is to suggest the ETs participate and then,,,,,become involved?

We will NEVER see that happen. The most humanity can expect from ETs are suggestions, hints and advice and only after we ask for it and demonstrate a collective willingness to accept what we're being offered, without losing our marbles over the imminent ET invasion and destruction of the world!

Santanu: Excellent analysis, which comes across (to me) as two things:

1. A summary of the fictional Vulcan race on the old TV series "Star Trek"
2. You must be a professor of something and a good one at that!

Your analysis of emotionality and responses, especially the Eastern vs Western styles, is accurate.

scott 31/3/2016 16:35:24

Santanu, that was very clearly stated.

And Q4 struck a powerful chord...some true comfort in the GAG's response.

And Five More

31 March 2016

Q1: Are they (your GAGs) themselves bound to the spirit world of earth?

A: This assumes there exists a "spirit world of Earth" and if there is not such a place or space, then nothing can be bound to what does not exist. Our energetic souls and spirits are not bound to anything as in the sense of tied to or obligated to something. That notion runs contrary to free will, a defining aspect of all existence.

Q2: Are they (your GAGs) from another system? (e.g. Sirius): which would probably mean that you yourself (Patrick) is from that other system as well, just incarnated on earth this time around to help enlighten? On a mission?

A: We all have experiences as incarnated beings on planets in other solar systems but we are not from them in a physical sense. Our origins are not nearly as tied to a physical place as they seem. Yes, we are all on a mission. You mean am I on Earth to carry out a purpose for the greater benefit beyond my own? Yes.

Q3: Are they (your GAGs) in a body as well (e.g. light bodies) :assuming that every being other than the source is in some type of body; what is the nature of their bodies?

A: No, guardian angel guides are not connected to a physical body, not anywhere. They can appear or be seen that way if it is to the benefit of or the preference of observers but it is only a picture. Only wrapping or appearance, not substance.

Q4: Do they (your GAGs) have their own GAG(s)? (e.g. are they being guided by beings from a higher dimension?)

A: No. They have friends, associates and assistance if needed but are not guided in the way they watch over and accompany me or the way GAGs are with any human on Earth.

Q5: Do they (your GAGs) receive a reward themselves if they are successful in this mission (e.g.

mission of enlightening xxx number of people on earth) : are they promised a reward if they can successfully complete this mission? I am not questioning whether they are in it for selfish reasons, I know that selfish beings couldn't vibrate at their higher vibration, so given that they are selfless and most accomplished beings: more trying to understand the mechanism of mission and reward in their plane of existence

A: Yes, great rewards await but these are self rewards, not given by others with authority, control or rank over the recipient of the "prize". There is no promise based on criteria, goals and parameters of performance.

The mission and rewards are largely self created. This does not mean there are no other interested beings, for there are, many of them. All share in the collective satisfaction received by & from seeing the individual's reward of self-satisfaction.

Thank you Patrick and GAG - you are awesome. Thank you for being there. Every time I think I 'got it', I find out that I just 'created my own interpretation' of something which is not necessarily correct. I'm guessing everyone paints their own picture of what "it's like". The truth seems to be opening ourselves to a point where we understand the self will and freedom of our true nature, so that we don't paint any false pictures for ourselves which actually only builds walls around us. Thank you again.....Jake

One could wonder if there is such thing as a chain of command and what that is based on - Among the multitudes of entities in existence, there is presumably a "growth" factor, whereas one entity can transform into the next for one or several reasons and what could these reasons be? Yes, our limited thinking (as humans) could make it difficult if not impossible to comprehend, yet I believe there is such a thing, just like there is an "order" to everything else. Thank you Patrick.

Patrick 1/4/2016 10:40:07

This describes Earth and mankind at many points along its (our) known & accepted history.
