

Big Feet

27 February 2018

A reader asks:

This question is somewhat related to the concept of organizational aspects of "Heaven & Earth" (dimensional veils & unveils), but also somewhat tangential.

According to the article below, there is a woman suing certain California agencies for not believing that Bigfoot (er. is BigFeet plural for this species?!?) exists and then not taking appropriate action to protect the public.

She is taking quite an interesting approach (I suppose). It will be curious to see how the "long arm of the law" handles this sticky (& perhaps smelly) situation. They might just kick her out of the courtroom with a "bigfooted" boot of the justice department.

In the meantime, I'm curious what TC has to say about her assertion about her sightings and the existence of said BigFEET.

TC has recently weighed in on the existence of Mermaids and how (shy) & elusive they are, so I'd like to ask this.

1) Is the reason that Bigfoot, Sasquatch, Yeti sightings are so rare throughout history, because they bleed through "dimensional veils" (if you will). Meaning, they don't exist exclusively along a dimensional, vibrational frequency that we would identify as our version Earth? OR are they just good at staying out of sight, like a mermaid might?

2) Secondly, if they are "traversing" dimensional veils, what is the mechanism and or motivation for coming and going? Is it similar to our ET cousins popping in & out for a visit, now and then?

"Good Heavens", curious minds want to know.

Says The Committee: Greetings and salutations to all.

The motivation, not clearly recognized by this woman, is concealment and cover-ups. She believes this action is necessary to reverse the hidden information. She already believes strongly such beings exist, and of course, they do. She will not present good evidence to convince a court, more clearly a jury, to agree with her to then award a remedy within the ability of a court.

She believes there is concealment, of this there is no doubt. She hopes to force revelation of information she does not have, under rules a court must follow. We refer to the legal principle of disclosure, where opposing sides provide each other with evidence.

Unless it can be proven concealed evidence exists, as humans would accept and recognize, her case will stall. She must specifically list what must be disclosed, but knows not what to indicate.

To the questions, we turn:

1. Yes, these physical beings can become invisible however it is not instantly that this is done. Think of meditation, and that describes the process somewhat roughly, by which the Yeti, or Sasquatch or BigFoot friends of yours, disappear from human view.

They are also very talented and capable at avoiding human contact and detection, generally a preferred way. They do not enter vibrational frequencies invisible to humans, as avoidance. It is done as part of life, experience, and the way to experience many states of mind and matter.

2. The mechanism is mental; as it is with all things humans do. All actions begin with thought; no muscle moves alone, save for a twitch or tick yet these are not material. Things all humans do and say, commence with thoughts. The mind is the controller of matter, the body but the machine built to respond to commands. The body machine of the Yeti is configured for capability humans have not.

Earth teems with life given to many capabilities humans will never have. To run as does a cheetah, to carry multiples of a being's own body weight as does an ant, or to bark or howl like a canine, are all examples.

By your cousins, we understand you mean extraterrestrial visitors; they cloak and conceal their ships, vessels and bodies yes, but do not themselves do so across vibrational frequencies. There is no need, and many of your cousin visitors to Earth have no need to do it. Many also cannot. Just as you cannot.

Key among human differences, is speech as means and method for communication.

We conclude by saying, no fear of Yeti need exist; they are zero threat to humans when left alone. They would and will interact with any one of you, with your trust and acceptance, and they will return the same to you completely.

The challenge is your fellow hu/wo/man; will you speak of your encounter? Likely yes and how will other humans react?

The Yeti will defend themselves and more aware and intelligent of & than humans, they are. They know keenly how humans have developed long range capability to harm or kill them, from five hundred meters to more than that, now as easily as three times that distance. No trap might you set, for they will detect and avoid one with total, complete accuracy.

They know the difficulty of avoiding a bullet fired accurately from great distance, and thus know to remain far beyond humans, to avoid this. Easily is this achieved, because humans are concentrated in compact areas. Humans only reach places the Yeti choose to be with great efforts, something rarely done by human beings, if no good or clearly achievable purpose is expected.

A surprise encounter which turns violent would be of great danger to a human. They will swiftly defend themselves, to neutralize the human threat and prevent such human from calling others to them, before they can meditate their invisibility.

They are the natural species to Earth, evolved over eons of time before humans were created. They are benevolent, gentle, extremely intelligent and docile until threatened. Just as are you humans.

You will not see one in your lifetime, so low are the chances for a random encounter and if you were to encounter one, and your good intentions were detected, for they are telepathic to a great degree and use this know what you think, you might be welcomed and asked to join them.

Alas, you cannot but temporarily welcomed might you be, if no harm or threat were present. They know this is so rare, the risk must be avoided at all times.

Human have yet to collectively learn observation of the unknown without fear. The some of you achieve this already, and the many of you are born with it. Nearly all of mankind is, however again, human social training imbues all of you with concern, fright and worry of the unknown.

There are few Yeti, they are but a drop of water in an ocean, by comparison to humans. Avoid you they will.
