

Blood Moon Eclipse

18 February 2018

I started this channeling session, got distracted, busy and forgot about it. Only now, on "Sundee" the eighteenth of Febbu-Erry (one of many American accents) am I getting back to it.

Accents? Mispronunciations? Examples, just from Texas: (Louisiana is another story altogether. The Americanization of French words there is...entertaining or irritating, especially if you speak French well. I think it's entertaining.)

Correct Spelling	"Correct" Pronunciation	What is it?
Bexar	Bear	A county
Brazos	BRA ziss	9 th longest river in the USA, all inside one state
Pedernales	Puhr din AL iss	A much shorter river
Refugio	Re FYUR eeoh	A town
La Grange	Luh GRAINGE	Town halfway between Houston and Austin
Fuqua	FEW qway	Road in southeast Houston
Salado	Suh LADE Oh	Small town
Kuyhkendahl	KERR kin dahl	Long road northwest of Houston
Wednesday	WHENZ Dee	Hump Day
Lamesa	Luh MEE suh	Town between Midland and Lubbock
Humble	UM bull	Town northeast of Houston
Cleburne	KLEE burn	Town south southwest of Dallas
Aldine	ALL deen	Town near Houston
Nacogdoches	Nack uh DO chiss	Town in east Texas
San Jacinto	Sand Juh SIN toe	River
Beaumont	BOW mont	City
Revolver	Sixgun	Old fashioned
Protected Wetlands	Swamp	Common where it rains
Arsenal	Gun collection	Common, whether it rains regularly or not.

(OK, I got a little funny with the last three, sure. For y'all that don't live here, I hope you enjoyed this brief language tour of the Lone Star State.)

Okay, back to bidniss

What I was explaining was, I didn't try to watch the lunar eclipse a few weeks ago, knowing I'd fall asleep. Earlier in the evening the full moon's brightness was amazing. Knowledgeable people say 14% closer means 30% brighter.

No kidding..... really? 🤔

However it's measured, I don't doubt that based on what I saw. It's only once in a blue moon, anyway.

This session's title might be catchy but it ain't about lunacy, just rambling in Month Two of Two Thousand Eighteen. 'Bout ten and a half twelfths of the year remain; hold tight, folks.

Q: Esteemed Committee, what about transportation technology in general? Not just self driving cars, but alternatives on other planets, viable on Earth?

C: There are three modes on Earth; aquatic, land surface and flight. Which of these three?

Q: "On Earth"? There is a mode of planetary transport on another planet which isn't one of these three?

C: Yes, and between them principally, although many alien ET ships travelling through Earth's atmosphere move in such a manner that flight does not apply, as humans understand the word.

Q: No matter what questions I have, your answers always take us off the planned track. What does "between them principally" mean?

C: This is no railroad; we may track where we choose. Mainly among the three, is what we wished to say. Struggle with human words we sometimes do, as do all users of the language. We are newer to it, in experience and volume, to what many or nearly all of you reading already are.

Q: OK, so what's the main method of transport, aside from land, sea and water?

C: Hovering, by means of electromagnetic movement through air, but it is not flight using air pressure differential.

Q: What the ET scout ships use?

C: Yes.

Q: Since we're talking about ETs, allow me to pursue the topic. I recently saw a few Darryl Anka videos where he channels Bashar, after not having seen any such YooToob videos for a few years. They're great, in my humble opinion. Then I stumbled onto something else, which suggested Pleidians are the ET race which most closely resembles humans, physically. Is this accurate?

C: Yes.

Q: Would we have the same vibration incongruence problem with them, as compared to Sirians or Arcturans?

C: Yes.

Q: Can we physically adapt and overcome this?

C: Yes, if you pass time on their planets and in their physical presence. Gradually.

Q: Let's ramble off elsewhere. A longtime reader sent me a really interesting transcript of a session with a channel named Zingdad, bringing information from a Pleidian. In it was described how the assassins of JFK filmed the killing to show it to subsequent US presidents, to force them to play along with their preferences. Whether that threat was made to previous US presidents isn't relevant, since they've left power. Has the current president been shown the movie?

C: No.

Q: Will that happen?

C: Very likely, however there is a vast difference between this president and predecessors. The current one is accustomed to large and also negative attention in public, in ways none of the previous leaders were. To rise in the political system means to sell popularity, and avoid negative publicity. This does not mean bad reactions do not happen to all political leader candidates, however none have been or were exposed to the extent the current president has endured for decades.

The current president will call the assassins' bluff, because he knows his demise would be detrimental to the interests of the killers. The president's political enemies have overplayed their opposition efforts, and have caused attack fatigue among the population. The only appeal the attacks are generating now is with people who already would not have voted for this president. The remaining segment of the population has grown numb to the stream of criticism and attacks, which turn mostly hollow.

Q: Trump will be re-elected, as you (y'all, really) said before. That will not change?

C: Yes, he will and no, it won't.

Q: OK, let's shift gears. A reader asked if The Alien Handbook will be popular and/or successful. You've indicated to me privately, it will and that's what I answered here. To that question. Is this still the case? How successful? To me, that it was even taken up by a prestigious publisher such as Ozark Mountain is success enough!

C: The sequel you have begun, will also be quite successful. Both will be very good sellers.

Q: More time to channel here, for the readers!

C: If you so choose. A good choice for all, we say.

Q: The Florida high school massacre has had me upset the past few days. Not just what's happened but the criticism and reaction. The latest irritant was the president saying the FBI screwed up by putting too much effort into a Russian US election collusion investigation, and not this killer. A classic, big mouthed politico statement, surprisingly from a big mouth who usually can't even try to sound like a politician. Why did the killer do it?

C: Anger.

Q: Was Nikolas Cruz pre-destined to kill more than a dozen people, as part of his life plan?

C: It was an option, not a certainty. There are some cases where this is written specifically into a life plan and all participants proceed to the place, location and moment of the event. There also occur the random events, large, group killings, as haphazard events. These are very rare, more rare than the large group events, themselves also rare. Then there are the optional events, as was this one. Participants and the killer wrote in the detour, the alternate route or option.

Q: So many mass killers fight responders and get killed, or commit suicide. Why did this one do neither?

C: He wanted not death, but relief and revenge.

Q: Relief from?

C: The anguish of feeling rejected. To sense power and control.

Q: Revenge provides this?

C: Of course not, revenge supplies nothing except an extension of the troubles. The major step forward humanity will take, is to acknowledge revenge as very detrimental to s/he who seeks it.

Q: Why does it happen?

C: You teach it to one another. Why do reading and writing occur?

Q: Point taken. Are the upcoming imprisonment and inevitable series of interviews with young Mr. Cruz going to be of any help?

C: Yes. He will over time come to see his motivations, if he survives long enough. His notoriety and now national and temporarily, worldwide infamy will ensure he is held separately from other inmates, to prevent injury or attack to him. He cannot be held separate forever, and he might come to see other prisoners as replacements for the former classmates and peers he sought to liquidate. He has and will have no such ability, yet might lash out anyway. These fights pose a certain risk of death to him. It is likely he will survive this stage or phase. There will arise public opposition to attention given him, suggesting it is a reward. This reaction has its justification but we will tell you now, the message which might be offered through such interviews.

Possession of weapons, and removal of them, are neither cause nor solution. Young Mr. Cruz could have easily used a motor vehicle, makeshift firebomb or poison to achieve a similar effects. Such things are never suggested banned.

Too many of you have become stressed, and focused upon yourselves because of it. There wash over Earth now, stronger energies than have been, for many hundreds of centuries. These you cannot control, however you can control other things which will reduce or even balance the negative effects of higher energy.

Stress, concern, worry and angst over money, possessions, status, public image and progress as you see and prefer them to be and occur, can be changed. We offer a list of suggestions to you all, which we have said many times before.

The opinions of others about you, are not your business. Be yourself, and allow others to react as they choose. Don't you already do this yourself? Of course, you do. Then recognize others are doing the same and accept what will happen already.

Consider the effect a possession has, compared to its purpose. An iPhone or wristwatch do what? Do you require the function or is it optional? If an inexpensive version serves the purposes equally well compared to a very costly or pricey one, is the image or status attached to the outlay of wealth required, also a reason to have it? We refer to our previous suggestion; do you care what others think, as any part of the reason you want or have it? How much? This debate you can have with yourself in absolute privacy, and your GAGs will supply valuable opinions.

Do you choose to be kind or less so to others around you? You control yourself, of course. You cannot controls reactions to you, but your intent yes, you do. Do you act on autopilot or do you consciously choose how to interact with others? It is easy to act on autopilot. Think about your habits, that is all. As you do, others coming into range and into your sphere of effects, both received and given, will do the same. You can always defend yourself if needed, this is fine yet rare. You can also depart, can you not? If you wish to remain and interact with others, your goodwill approach will obtain the same for you.

The troubled around you are even more receptive to goodwill than the less troubled. They do not always project it, it is not always obvious. Look calmly and your GAGs will alert you, this will seem like your impression or intuition. If the chance to be kind to a troubled person arises, help yourself to a great extent and do so.

Help another person in some way. It is common to say something is being paid forward. This is true and accurate. When help and generosity you later need, they will appear, without fail. There is no possibility this will not occur. What you the recipient do not know is, when your moment of needs will flare up. Never mind, it will when it does and you will not be warned. You would avoid it and then lose the chance at the lesson, if you instruct yourself and your GAGs to keep this quiet. Help is part of the lesson, for both you and the helpers, and consider this aspect of being helpful yourself today, to supply the lesson of being helpful to you, to & for someone else tomorrow. That you are helped also, is a nice layer of sweet benefit on top.

Be well, we wish all. Do return soon, as shall we.
