

What is the Point?

12 July 2017

A reader asks:

Q: What is the point of our souls having these lives and experiences on earth?

C: To have the opportunity to ask a question such as this one.

The questions continue:

Q: Once a soul learns/experiences things, then what?

C: You enjoy them, because you have grown. Why does a tree grow?

Q: What is a soul's ultimate goal?

C: This assumes there exist time, deadlines, finishing lines, stages of completion thus incompleteness.

Q: After being on earth however many times, what will ultimately happen to our souls?

C: There is no ultimatum.

Q: I've never heard or read anyone ask or talk about what's next for our souls or what the soul's plan is, after all this.

C: Your soul does not have a plan, which suggests an objective. How well have you come to Earth and to its ways, chosen by all of you, in the collective! Our congratulations.

Q: Why do the souls experience the earth lives all at the same time?

C: There is no other way; there is no time. There is no way to experience sequentiality but for the illusion the false notion of time creates.

Q: If it's just to gain experience and knowledge quickly, then what's next? I don't understand the point of us, as souls.

C: There exists no quickly just as there is no slowly.

The Committee goes on.

"If you do not mind, we speak generally to these questions.

Growth, knowledge, compassion, hope, disappointment, fear, success, achievement, failure, triumph, opposition, progress, delay, peace, war, storms, sunshine, beauty, horror, ugliness, joy, excitement, wealth, poverty, abundance, scarcity, advancement, setback, worth, concern and regret are only a few of the many things your soul gains from your trip across Earth.

You may understand these things without a human life or a life as any other physical being you might become, on the many planets and in the many places your soul can go to have them. You cannot observe your way into the same experience, outside the artificial constraints which make it seem so real.

Your questions arrive simultaneously with the offering of the short book about Talawanda, and we speak to that story with our answers above. We explain the story in our understanding, to share with you all. Each who reads it will have their own interpretation, to each in the way their hope and happiness are best served by this story.

Your dreams are reality to the illusion of your life awake. You would say, your dreams are part of your life and to this we say, yes. For your life in a dense body is never detached from your true essence, and for this you sleep. You must revisit the true essence of your existence, because you cannot unbecome what you always are. If sleep is avoided, life ends. You cannot unhook from yourself this way.

How did Alana travel and return to the same spot, only hours after being far away for several days, mystified her. It should mystify you more, that you return to the same place and point of your human life each day, on Earth. This is the artificial path, the created existence, the false image and the hope of illusion. What you call reality, is not. What is deemed surreal, is true. What is imagined, already exists, because it has been created.

Alone are you never, if isolated you might believe you are. Isolation is but a function of bodily sensations and a suspension and suppression of your true abilities. Companionship returns to the most separated among all of you, no matter what the distance to the next human, as easily as loneliness comes to many among you despite great crowds. You can be alone when far away from others, but in cities do you best, or worst, find lonely humans and isolated souls.

Simply consider what you prefer, state what you want and allow your mind to wander where you please; all things you contemplate come to you. How well you retain them, is determined by the strength of your beliefs. If you do not have what you prefer, or lose what you do, it is simple to change belief thus course. Belief is the strongest glue, the most solid bond and the toughest material in existence.

Poor are you? Richness awaits inside the beliefs this also exists for you. It is no more simple and uncomplicated than that.

Destiny, achievement, completion and finality are but the ending of stages the illusion of time create. Growth and expansion of awareness are where you go, always. It matters not what route is chosen or followed, these two things are inevitable.

Repeat you do, the game of life, in order to fill in gaps only your review of the most recent match - which is really the closest, to become most recent - provides. Just as the end of an economic cycle is only understood well after it passes and is gone, only the review of what is done can highlight the spaces unfilled by experience you then set off again to have, so that you can fill them. Reincarnation and karma are these things called, but they neither operate nor exist, respectively, in the way the Earth perception teaches.

The next time you sleep, ask to visit your home and souls and places and pleasures of your true existence. There is no doubt this will happen and likely you will be, to remember some of your visit, after returning to the slumber of the wide open awareness being awake seems to be.

Safe travels and happy trails we do wish all. Be well until you again return."
