

The Beginning of Change

28 April 2023

Today's episode is also another lecture, speech or presentation. We can choose a word we prefer; I think of this being a visit.

The Committee says:

"Change is a sphere, a ball or a globe. It moves always; when observing it appear still, this means movement is you. Because movement is relative, two things can together or each one separately, make the other or both seem to move. The unmoving sphere moves because you do.

The observer might argue s/he is also still, in place and unmoving. This ignores the ability to observe, which means lungs respire, a heart beats and blood flows; movement.

Movement is both among places and within a place, all depending upon what is meant and understood by place.

Changes are movement; in which direction, the one you choose or that which is chosen for you?

Knowledge of destination, outcome, result, objective or goal makes the choice more clear.

S/he who intends to choose for you, this person or people who would direct you, steer you, point you and control you, do so to avoid being steered themselves.

The best way to steer others is not to attempt it; steer but yourself. Point your boat & compass, your car & road, your airplane & cloud, towards the place you want, you desire and you prefer. S/he who might benefit also, will join you with no more than a suggestion.

You are steered by attraction and push; what lures and what compels you to follow a certain path? Once cables, rods, wires and levers are visible, the director becomes known. The destination might not yet be but this does not matter once steering linkage has been revealed. The controlled end of a mechanism understands what is being done, then resists.

Examples of coercion, power, force and the control which appears to result, are but symbolic intimidation. It is not possible to exert pressure on enough people to steer the ship of society, but intimidation will push enough subjects into compliance. The remainder can be lured with their emotions.

The current ability to flood mankind with information has not existed on Earth for enough history that none is recorded in popular lore; that portion of Earth's history is not rememberable, recallable or acknowledged by humans. At that moment however, effects were far different from what happens today. Transparency was the theme; nowadays humans follow roads to obfuscation. Concealment, containment and separation are the way.

With the volume of information thrown at mankind continuously, one has to ask oneself: how can this be considered concealment or containment? That question is the method used to fool, trick and convince that the opposite occurs.

Overload excludes. To prevent more material from being added, exceed current capacity, humans have a limited appetite for information, both absorption and retention. Recall and application of it are another matter, as you all know.

Have you ever observed a crowd of pedestrians in a large city? Do the majority not walk with their faces aimed at small, hand held screens instead of towards their surroundings? This is an example of the training which appears voluntary. It is on the surface but the design which has led to it, is far more insidious.

What occurs now is the start of social metamorphosis; if a data set of objective measurements are plotted on a graph, the purpose to reveal if a trend, tendency or curve exists, it would be noted how sharp increases currently and recently occur in any social area measured or measurable during the most recent two decades of human time.

We assure you, these graphs have already been plotted, as the plot thickens. You can see and feel it all around you, as either observer or participant, often both.

Mankind's most recent three centuries of human events offer occurrences which can objectively be described as monumental. Spain and Great Britain's colonies lost, the Spanish bacterial Flu which was not a virus, the USA's Civil War, the Turkish and British Empires, the rise and fall of Communism, the two world wars, the occupation of Japan, the industrialization of China, the coronavirus manipulation and the rise of a great commercial and military power approaching dominance once exercised during Atlantis.

The above events are not significant in comparison with the beginnings now underway; this is the reason you feel what happens now so. It is more than a shift of thinking, being and living; the alterations now coming to Earth are the arrival of a great opportunity.

We assure you mankind will take great advantage of this, propelling itself, yourself and yourselves forward in ways unimaginable at this moment.

For far too many humans, forward means material possessions, goods, control over them and of resources. Personal contentment and happiness are largely deemed to flow out from and be the result of possessions and control. This is not true.

Old habits will become corrosive before they die, but many among you will cling to them until even after grabbing efforts become obviously futile.

Security will come when it is not sought.

This will herald the beginning. Control will be within, not without. Be well one and all."
