

Creating Reality

21 October 2024

Discussion, advice, analysis & general conversation about this topic are not in short supply, if one goes looking. I don't do it often or deeply, yet even I run across abundant treatment of the subject.

The overall idea: thoughts create reality, but even more intriguing is the concept that humans perceive a reflection of oneself. Looking at Donald Trump or any Kardashian makes the notion a massive personal challenge, but I'll explore the topic with The Committee anyway.

Exhibit A

Exhibit B

Q: Esteemed Committee, how can any one of us humans reflect another human who is and looks so obviously different, or see in such a different person a reflection of ourselves? Exhibits A and B refer.

C: Human differences are human, but you are not solely a human. The immense differences perceived are a human creation, your agreement to both make and see them is part of your life plan, your agreement, your contract. The human journey is voluntary, which is what makes the solidity of perceptions seem permanent.

What is forced, compelled and imposed seems, because it is, temporary, when compared to what is taken on willingly. If a human is forced to marry another person, that arrangement will seem artificial if not outright fake, from the first suggestion of it, throughout the arrangement and then the memory of it after having ended. Two people forced to engage as such, shall never consider the situation a marriage. When doing so voluntarily, however....

Many things in the human Earth environment appear and act as solid as rock. They are, because all the humans have agreed to this; your soul does not encounter the density you crash into as a human; you can easily pass through any solid matter on and of Earth even more easily than you the human passes through air.

The human who chooses to appear as Donald Trump or a Kardashian also receives the agreement of all humans to perceive the choice the soul makes. Look at yourself in a mirror; you will say that any person standing beside you will agree that the reflected image of you they see in the mirror, is precisely what you are, but reversed. The other people see you in the reflection exactly as you are without a mirror. You also see them reflected and straight on, seeing the same person.

This is a choice you make, and an agreement you make, both. To agree to this human condition is voluntary. To have it perceived as permanent, beyond personal control or influence and continuous, is voluntary.

S/he who disagrees need not incarnate as human.

Q: So what might a soul do if s/he doesn't want this, but desires the experience of incarnation?

C: Such a soul incarnates as a dense physical being in a different environment, usually on a different planet, or creates the environment with the characteristics and parameters which suit the goal and experience the soul wishes to achieve.

We suggest an obstacle course, a combination of fixed and variable. The obstacles are set in place, shape and size but you running the course have many choices available as you go. To make the achievement of reaching the finish line worth the effort, the obstacles must be fixed. The efforts made to evade, avoid, surpass, skip and conquer the impediments encountered, and to do so faster than other participants, offer lessons, rewards and benefits.

Solving a mathematical equation for unknown results requires certain parts to be set and agreed. Otherwise, no challenge, learning or progress will come about.

Q: So why w/should a soul choose Earth? Are there not better alternatives?

C: No, because better is subjective. Better alternatives are that way because the soul choosing them deems the alternative better, for her/himself.

Subjectivity is the natural way of the universe; objective impartiality is a creation.

Q: Famous author Ayn Rand created a philosophy and named it Objectivism, which as you know I have not studied, so...

C: We know, of course. Go on....

Q: ...Rand postulated, or theorized or concluded that objective reality forms the basis of human existence, that denial of objective reality —rock is solid and heavy, water is wet, the color green is a specific frequency of light, etcetera— leads to errors, mistakes and misguided human life paths.

[Sidebar: If any reader knows Rand's Objectivism Philosophy and wishes to correct this, please...]

The Esteemed Committee is telling us this is not true. What gives?

C: Rand is correct, inside the human environment. Her philosophy does not include the existence of the human soul, independent of the human body and physical environment which supports human life. Her philosophy is correct, if Heaven does not exist. It does; you are in Heaven now.

Q: Let's explore exhibits A & B; take a consumer of entertainment often taking in material with lots of B included, who might also vote in the USA and is thus aware of A. We all know, this media consumer ain't nothin' like A or B and ain't never gonna be (please excuse the American slang..) so how does either one of these people reflect a viewer voter? I mean, if I looked in the mirror and saw either one, I'd probably faint, throw up or get rid of the mirror in 2 to 3 milliseconds.

C: You have agreed to two things, your appearance and that of others. Each agreement is a coin with two sides, this means four aspects apply; the Trump coin means what he has chosen as one side of the first coin, and the other side is your choice to see what he chooses to project. The same things apply to the Kardashian coin.

If you come face-to-face with either person where no reflection or photograph is involved, you discover or see immediately how no human representation is required, no television screens, computer display or printed photograph are required. The same two-sided agreement applies, s/he will see what YOU have chosen to show, because you choose to project it.

This to & fro is the objective reality to which a philosopher such as Rand refers; Rand's philosophy seeks to compartmentalize the apparently objective parts first, enabling analysis and understanding of the subjective, non-objective bits all situations contain and present.

Human reality however, always has both. This is the ying-yang of Eastern philosophy, or the principal difference between male and female thought. The male pattern of logic followed by emotion is balanced by the female approach of emotion then logic.

Runaway emotionality which suppresses logic leads, among humans, to chaos. Runaway logic suppressing emotion leads to destruction.

The creation of reality human thought produces always includes healthy amounts of both. The beauty of human life is the departure then arrival of each focus. When things become unbalanced, a counter balancing force is drawn into the relative vacuum created by the movement of too much ying away from the yang, or vice versa.

The events and effects which occur as the differing forces draw apart then together, create some of the more wonderful opportunities the universe offers.

Q: So, how do I look upon an image of Donald Trump and see myself reflected? How does anybody do this? [Given the choice, I'd rather look like a Kardashian but that's just the lesser of two evils.]

C: The outside image of Trump, his voice, the ideas of which he speaks and the effects of his actions are the objective parts he chooses and you agree to see & hear. How you react emotionally is how you create what you see and is the method by which you are reflected in him.

Allow us a concrete example; Trump as the elected official offers, supports and implements public policy regarding crude oil, immigration and military activity, to select three examples. Do you like, dislike or not care? Your chosen reaction if you are involved or policy directly affects you, or your emotion if you are neither, creates a reflection in Trump of what you prefer. Thus have you feelings about him, which you create. Trump becomes your reflection, his physical body and presence notwithstanding.

If human bodies and the Earth environment are stripped away, the reactions remain. No more physical differences apply and the reflection is immediate and unambiguous.

Q: What about the Earth environment and the Law of Attraction?

C: The entire universe you inhabit, as either soul or incarnated human, is a thought creation. The delay in creation of something within the Earth environment occurs because the Earth environment includes time, which does not exist away from Earth. The Law of Attraction is simply a subset of universal creation.

Q: So we can create anything we want on Earth?

C: Yes, however two questions are always asked and considered when doing so; how will this creation affect you, and affect other incarnated souls? The reason for the delay in manifesting what thoughts create, is to allow your human body the chance to consider and consult with your guides and the guides of all potentially affected humans. If the plan is good to proceed, the parts & pieces which need fall into place will be re-aligned. Doing this without disturbance of other souls' life plans against their will, requires human Earth surface time.

Q: This means predictions of future events....

C: Can change and often do. Forgive our intrusion and unrequested completion of your sentence.

Q: If we humans recruit enough of ourselves to agree the sky should be green instead of blue, that oceans be rid of all salt, that Kim Kardashain get a crewcut hairstyle, that....

C: All of these changes can be achieved. The more agreement, the faster and even instantaneous the change will become.

Welcome to Heaven.

Q: Thank you, Esteemed Committee.

C: Welcome are you all, do return and be well.
