

Loose Change

02 May 2023

Coins in a person's pocket & purse, or unplanned, unforeseen & uncontrolled evolution and developments? Money or news?

Q: Esteemed Committee, how about using the word "change" to describe what has already happened? Could that be involuntary control?

C: What is done is finished. Nothing is ever done thus nothing is ever finished. The illusion of time on Earth allows the selection of a number along the line, either clock or calendar, at which the notion of finished can be affixed. A thing to be used is not finished when its purpose is exercised, when it is put to purpose.

Change is permanent; to suggest a change must be made, rests upon the false idea a static situation or circumstance exists. This cannot be. No matter how solid something appears, it is not but for agreed perception.

Q: Where I am going with these questions is: why willingness, sometimes even eagerness from some people happens while others resist forcefully. Why?

C: This effect you describe is not change or evolution, it is unawareness of tolerance. To be accepted first requires it.

Q: What about uncontrolled evolution or development?

C: Is does not exist. For changes to occur, decisions are required, on Earth as it is in Heaven.

Q: Why could it be called uncontrolled?

C: Someone doesn't like what s/he sees where s/he also has no influence.

Q: Why don't human societies –sometimes sovereign nations, sometimes regions– progress better?

C: This question wins a narrow subjectivity award. Define progress and include criteria for better as compared to less good. In your reply, you must include a definition of trade-off and explore net effects, after positive development ensues and unintended consequences manifest.

Q: Y'all got me. Moving on to agreements; even if a majority support, volunteer then make efforts to modify and hopefully improve things, such as housing & food prices or crime, what can be done about detractors, critics and opposers?

C: Be glad they exist and thank them. Someday you have all been or shall be members of the critical opposition to something. Shall you be silenced and squashed when that comes to pass? Possibly you have been already.

Q: The ongoing challenge seems to be envy and complaint. Obviously most people don't entertain much, if any, of either thing but this majority is as quiet as the stars.

C: Astronomers everywhere gather to protest you; stars are the noisiest things in the universe. You do not hear from the non-envious, non-complainers because you collectively choose to give attention to envious complaints. It is entertaining.

Q: I doubt the Bolsheviks thought Tsarist Russia, Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels were entertaining.

C: But these things remain a great attraction; what is seen as most serious is the least serious thing of your existence.

Q: I can hear disagreement to that idea from halfway around Earth!

C: Disagreement does not incorrect make.

Q: When uncontrollable events begin to occur more frequently, affecting more people and gaining critical mass, what will come of the envious complaints? Allow me a brief example of something irrelevant to the point of ridiculous: Scanning news today, I saw a few details about customers in a Southern California restaurant standing for the National Anthem (I am guessing a sporting event) where other customers took & posted complaining video of what the video makers believed is bad.

C: The coming developments to Earth will be an excellent reason for humans to re-examine decisions and choices, when reacting to events directly reaching them but which are beyond personal or any human control. Most humans do not list choices, to then compare benefits, risks and probabilities each option. Humans mostly act, as demonstrated by the restaurant videographers, without considering much beyond their preferred response and reaction. We can assure you, the relatively self-centered behavior currently and fashionably obvious, will become less popular.

Q: Are the bank collapses in the USA going to continue?

C: Yes, and around the world also.

Q: Esteemed Committee, thank you.

C: Our pleasure to be asked; our wishes for you all to be well.
